Risking it all

There is a certain type of person who thrives on the addictive adrenaline rush of doing something dangerous. In the last few years there has been a noticeable rise in the number of so-called extreme sports like mountain boarding, sky surfing, whitewater kayaking and barefoot waterskiing, to name but a few. What they all have in common is an element of danger and whether they take place on land, water, or in the air, they all involve speed, height and a high level of physics.

The most spectacular (and dangerous) of these sports, however, must surely be base jumping. BASE stands for Buildings, Antennae, Spans (bridges) and Earth; in other words, anything that is high enough to be jumped off with a parachute.

Base jumpers belong to a secretive, 'underground' community that likes to play where the world sleeps. Two of Britain's most successful base jumpers are Dan Wicha's, a veteran with over ten years' experience, and his right-hand man Ian Richardson. To become a member of this elite group, you can apply for an official number once you've carried out a four genres of jumps successfully (*namely: building, antenna, span and earth). As of 2011 approximately 1,400 base numbers have been allocated, but interestingly not many to women.

So what is it that motivates someone to risk their life in this way? Dan and Ian explain that a successful jump gives an unbeatable high, but the lows are often fatal. One wrong turn or gust of wind can result in a very serious accident. Since base jumping was invented there have been 147 deaths, meaning one in six people who take up the sport are killed. Dan is a natural athlete, a roofer by profession, who has escaped serious injury in over 800 jumps. I can't drive past a new building or crane without thinking maybe... maybe... he says. But now the risks he's taking are becoming more and more extreme as he goes in search of new challenges and new skills. Fine perhaps for him, but not so easy for friends and family who must surely wonder each time he goes out whether he'll come back safe.

Ian Richardson, on the other hand, has earned a reputation among his base jumper friends as being rather accident-prone. In 2009 he was almost killed when he smashed into the side of a building after his parachute opened incorrectly. This has not, however, stopped him from risking it all, time and time again. To an outsider, taking such risks seems somehow irresponsible but clearly this sport has a psychological hold over its participants.
